PRACTICAL TRAINING

First month.—Attachment to a rural police station as Head Constable Writer. Special attention be given to maintenance of the duty roster, the general diary and the other police station records and returns, the accounts work of the police station, including preparation of Travelling Allowance, bills of staff, the use of the Police and Criminal Intelligence Gazettes, and Receipt and disposal of complaints. The probationers should attend the morning prades and kit inspections and question the subordinates to check their knowledge.

Second Month.—Attachment to a senior Sub Inspector in a rural police station to learn duties relating to the prevention of crime, surveillance, checking of hotels, dharmashals and other public places or haunts likely to be visited by bad characters including bazars in the interior, and collection of intelligence about crime and criminals generally. The probationers should be taken out on tour extensively.

Third and Fourth Months.—Attachment of the officer in charge of a rural police station to attend inquestes and atleast six investigations. The probationers should be taught how to collect clues for scientific examination and write case diaries independently. They should accompany the Circle Inspector for enquiries and investigations in atleast two cases, attend one of his inspections and see the police arrangements on occasions for crowd control and mob dispersal. They should be initiated into public relations work by introduction to politicians, pressmen, panchayat members and the local public and social workers and taught how to develop understanding and tact. Special attention should be given to the development of the correct attitudes, matters relating to man-management, the role of the police with regard to social legislation and the art of report writing (as far as possible training in the first four months should be at the same police station).

Fifth Month.—Attachment to the prosecution branch under the direct supervision of the Police Prosecutor. The probationer would learn office work, how to scrutinise charge sheets and prepare briefs and accompany the Police Prosecutor to courts to watch the conduct of one sessions case from the beginning to the end, including cross-examination of witnesses and arguments by lawers for the prosecution and the defence. The probationers would be taken for interviewing un-identified prisoners in jail and explained how previous convictions are traced.

Sixth Month.—Attachments with the district special branch, the crime branch and the MOB. Some cases of inter-district and inter-state crime would be explained.

Seventh and Eighth Months.—Posting as a Junior Sub Inpector and extra investigating officer to a medium sized police station where he would have an opportunity to investigate a variety of offences and participate in different types of police station work.

Ninth and Tenth Months.—Posting as extra investigating officer to a city police station where the crime work is heavy. He would be required to go on night rounds, supervise beat work and be associated with the work relating to tarffic and sarafa (Jwellery market) checking, handling law and order situations and industrial problems and dealing with white collar crime, smuggling, vice etc. The probationers should visit correctional institutions wherever they exist and 2 weeks attachement to an Armed Police Battalion.

Explanatory Note

(This does not form part of the notification but is intended to indicate the general purport).

Government have reserved certain number of posts in the category of Assistant Sub Inspector in the Police Department for appointment by Special recruitment from among Scheduled Caste/Scheduled Tribe. But there are no rules regulating appointment by direct recruitment to the above post. Therefore Government consider that it is necessary to make Special Rules under the Kerala Public Services Act for the recruitment of Scheduled Caste/Scheduled Tribe candidate to the above posts in the Police Department. This notification is intended to achieve this object.
